

Top Five Suggestions to Communicate with Teens

- 1. The Secret to Opening Your Child's Ears:
Here's a simple secret that will help you in everything you do with your teen: No matter how hard it might be, try to start all interactions with your child with understanding, even if you don't fully agree or even quite comprehend what they're talking about.
- 2. Take the Emotionality Out of the Equation:
Emotion is your enemy when you're trying to get through to your teen. Remind yourself that what he says and does is not a reflection on you. You may not like how he's behaving—or even how he's thinking—but keep your emotions out of it, even if his behavior impacts you.

3. Ask Curious Questions...Not Loaded

Questions: Ask your teen for his ideas and be collaborative. Let him see that you believe in him and that you're not mad at him for struggling in his life. When you let him see that you have faith in his abilities and he has the space to work things out on his own, you will begin to develop true confidence in him.

4. Don't Be Needy; Stand On Your Own

Two Feet: Don't "need" your teen's cooperation, validation, or good behavior. As soon as you need something from your child so that you can feel better, you have put yourself in a vulnerable position because he does not have to give it to you. When you need something and don't get it, you will naturally try harder by controlling and manipulating more.

5. Don't Do Anything Until You're Both Calm:
Another rule of thumb is to avoid doing anything until you and your child have both calmed down. The fact is, you don't have to respond to your child when you are upset, or when your child is upset and in your face. You just don't. You can say nothing. You can take a few minutes or more if you need to.
